

Researching Early Intervention for Children with Special Needs – A review of some current practice.

Hugh Somervell and Wendy Messenger

This paper will review some of the current research and practice in the implementation of early intervention strategies for children with special needs. Starting with an analysis of some of the international research into early intervention (for example through EU funded projects) questions will be raised about the process. An example of the strategy adopted in Britain (Early Support) will be used to illustrate and answer some of the issues raised by the research and questions asked about how such strategies may be put into practice.
